Switzerland has a long-standing scientific tradition, and Swiss-based researchers are worldwide recognised for their scientific work. Switzerland has produced several strategies to map the road towards Open Science in the country. Compared to other European countries, Switzerland is ahead in the curve in the adoption of Open Science practices, and has a structured plan to develop this further.

Examples of suggestions discussed in the National Tripartite Events

- Create incentives for Universities and RPO to adopt OS practices, and strengthen recognition and reward
- Support data stewards (co-financing)
- Provide funds for thematic competence centres
- Include in publicly funded research project grant agreements an Open Access mandate
- Appoint an OS delegate in institutions
- Promote multi-stakeholderism at national level to set goals for OS and FAIR principles
- Stimulate national organisations with large networks to help regional and local communities
- Support RI through long term funding
- Combine bottom up approaches with top down national strategic initiatives
- Demonstrate the added value of EOSC
